Mineral Rights Xchange

THE MINERAL OWNER'S DECISION GUIDE

Before You Sell Your Mineral Rights

7 questions to ask before accepting an offer plus an offer-comparison worksheet.

By Travis

Fictional MRX AI Guide

Published by Mineral Rights Xchange

Practical questions. Clearer next steps.

OFFER COMPARISON

Compare terms
Compare terms
Compare terms

START HERE

A clearer decision starts with better questions.

An offer can put a big number in front of you before you have the facts to judge it. This guide helps you slow the decision down, organize what you know, and ask useful questions before accepting an offer.

A useful first result

By the end, you should have a list of missing information, a side-by-side view of the written terms, and three questions for your next conversation. You do not need to decide to sell to use this guide.

Use it in three passes

First, read the seven questions on pages 3-9. Next, fill out the comparison worksheet on page 10 using the exact words in your offers. Finally, collect the records you have and write your next questions on pages 11-12. Write 'unknown' instead of guessing.

What this guide can and cannot do

It is an educational organizing tool, not an appraisal, title opinion, tax plan or recommendation to sell. A completed worksheet does not establish ownership or prove an offer is fair. Your records, agreement and state law matter.

Who is behind it

Published by Mineral Rights Xchange. Travis is a fictional MRX AI guide, not a human employee or licensed professional. MRX provides educational information only and does not buy mineral rights. Use an independent qualified professional for your legal, tax, title or valuation conclusions.

> You can ask for help without making a commitment to sell.

QUESTION 01

What do I actually own?

Begin with the interest and the records that describe it. The phrase 'my mineral rights' is a starting point for a conversation, not a complete description of the asset.

Start a simple property note

Write the state and county, the name on the records, and any legal description or well/unit identifiers you already have. Mark inherited or transferred interests that still need ownership review. Keep copies of the source documents beside your notes.

Keep different measures separate

Surface acreage, net mineral acres, net royalty acres and a payment decimal are not interchangeable. Ask the person using a number to explain its definition and show where it comes from. Do not copy a royalty decimal into an acreage field.

Ask for the basis

Which deed or other instrument describes the interest? Is this a mineral interest, royalty interest, or something else? Does the proposed sale include all of it or only a portion? What remains uncertain about the ownership chain?

Know where the search changes hands

In Texas, the Railroad Commission points owners toward county records for lease and royalty documents and provides production and permitting information. Those are different kinds of records. An oil-and-gas attorney or qualified title professional can help resolve ownership questions that a database search cannot answer.

> Write down the source of each ownership or acreage claim. A number without a source is a question to resolve.

Texas example: RRC Royalties FAQ. State procedures vary; see source notes, page 14.

QUESTION 02

What am I trying to accomplish?

Before comparing buyers, put your own objective into words. An offer that sounds attractive may not answer the problem you actually want to solve.

Name the objective

Are you exploring a lump sum, simplifying inherited interests, addressing uncertainty, or just checking an unsolicited offer? You may have more than one reason. Rank them so a conversation does not become only about the headline price.

Keep the options visible

Write down what you want to understand about keeping the interest, selling a portion if available, or selling the described interest. These are topics to evaluate with appropriate advisers, not instructions to choose one option.

Separate your timing from their timing

Record your preferred timing and the buyer's stated deadline separately. Ask whether a deadline is contractual, negotiable, or simply part of the offer. Do not assume that requesting more time changes an existing obligation.

Prepare for a tax conversation

Ask a qualified tax professional what information they need about how you acquired the interest, your records and a proposed transaction. This guide supplies no tax rate, deduction or after-tax outcome. Get transaction-specific advice before relying on a net amount.

> Finish this sentence: 'Before I decide, I need to understand _____.'

QUESTION 03

What exactly would the buyer receive?

Two offers can use similar language while asking for different property or rights. Compare the asset before comparing the amount.

Match the offer to the documents

Put the offer letter, proposed agreement, deed and every exhibit together. Note the version and date of each. Ask a qualified reviewer whether the documents describe the same transaction and what happens if their wording differs.

Check the boundaries

List the counties, legal descriptions, interest type, stated acreage basis, formations or depths, and any rights you intend to retain. Flag broad language or references to other property you cannot identify.

Ask about payments around the transfer

What effective date is proposed? Who keeps payments attributable to periods before and after that date? Does the description include unpaid or suspended proceeds? Ask for an explanation tied to the actual agreement.

Do not substitute a summary for review

A salesperson's explanation can help you locate a question. It does not resolve a discrepancy in the documents. Ask for unclear terms to be explained and reflected accurately in the written transaction documents before relying on them.

> Ask: 'Please show me where the documents define exactly what I would sell and what I would keep.'

Adapted organizing checklist; use MRX's offer-review framework and qualified document review.

Travis: fictional AI guide | Published by Mineral Rights Xchange

QUESTION 04

What assumptions sit behind the price?

A dollar amount is an answer to a set of assumptions. Your next job is to find out what those assumptions are and which facts support them.

Make the quote understandable

Is the number a total, a per-acre amount, or something else? Is it gross or after stated deductions? What quantity and type of interest is used? Ask for a written explanation rather than converting unlike units yourself.

Separate known information from projections

Ask which records were used and when they were current. Which parts depend on expectations about production, future activity, commodity prices or costs? What would change the proposed amount? A projection is not the same as an observed payment.

Compare terms, not just arithmetic

Even when both offers use net mineral acres, check that property scope, depths, retained rights, adjustments and closing conditions match. A per-acre calculation can standardize stated inputs; it cannot validate them or establish market value.

Explore the assumptions with a calculator

Use the free educational scenario calculator at MineralRightsXchange.com/mineral-rights-calculator/. Change your income, decline, discount and time assumptions to see their effect. It models a limited income scenario, not market value or a buyer's bid. No universal royalty multiple applies to every interest.

> A useful explanation lets you distinguish a documented fact from a forecast or an unresolved assumption.

Scenario-method reference: NARO Mineral Rights Valuation Guide; link on page 14.

QUESTION 05

What can change before closing?

The first number you see may be subject to conditions. Find the adjustment and exit questions before treating an offer as a settled result.

Locate the adjustment language

Can the amount change after ownership, title or other diligence? Who decides? What calculation applies? How will you be notified, and what choices do you have if you disagree? Ask a reviewer to point to the relevant language.

Put timing on one page

Record the proposed closing date, diligence period, any option or exclusivity period, extension provisions, and notice deadlines. Ask which dates are fixed and which can change, and who has that right.

Ask what happens if it does not close

What happens to a deposit, signed deed or other documents? What obligations survive? Are there costs or conditions attached to ending the process? Do not assume that every offer is nonbinding or that every cancellation is consequence-free.

Keep a version trail

Save each draft, attachment and written clarification with its date. When terms change, update your comparison worksheet. Ask your qualified reviewer to consider the current full set of documents, not an earlier summary.

> Ask: 'What could change the amount, timing, or rights I keep - and what choices would I have?'

QUESTION 06

Who is buying, and how will I be paid?

A smooth explanation is not a substitute for knowing the counterparty and the closing process. Make both explicit.

Identify the actual parties

Who is making the offer? Who will sign and fund the transaction? Is anyone acting for another party, and can the agreement be assigned? Ask how you can independently verify the information supplied.

Understand the closing sequence

Who handles closing, what documents are required, when is payment expected to be final, and when are documents delivered or recorded? Ask your adviser to explain how the proposed sequence protects your interests.

Confirm payment instructions carefully

Ask how bank or payment instructions are verified and how changes are handled. Use an independently verified contact method if instructions change. Do not send banking information through a public chat or the free-guide form.

Know what a check does not prove

An entity registration, polished website or familiar name does not by itself establish funding, authority or reliability. Ask what evidence is appropriate for this transaction rather than treating one database result as an endorsement.

> Write down the buyer, signer, funding party and closing contact. Resolve differences before relying on an assumption.

QUESTION 07

What still needs an answer?

The strongest outcome of this guide is a short, specific list of unresolved questions. Match each question to someone who can actually answer it.

Legal, title and contract questions

Ask an appropriately qualified attorney or title professional about ownership, inheritance, conveyance scope, obligations and the effect of the proposed documents. Identify the state and county at the start.

Tax and financial questions

Ask qualified advisers about transaction-specific consequences and how alternatives fit your circumstances. A proposed gross payment is not an after-tax financial plan.

Production and value assumptions

Ask what records, dates and assumptions support an analysis and what the analysis cannot establish. Clarify whether the person supplying it may benefit from the transaction.

Where MRX can help

MRX helps organize facts, missing information and offer questions for an educational underwriter conversation. Travis provides general educational guidance. MRX does not buy mineral rights. Neither this guide nor a chat provides a certified appraisal or individualized professional advice.

> Unknown does not mean bad. It means 'ask this next.'

WORKSHEET 01

Put the offers side by side.

Use the actual written terms. Leave blanks or write 'unknown' when something is missing. Keep this worksheet with your documents; it is not a valuation or a winner score.

TERM TO CHECK	OFFER A	OFFER B
Buyer / offer date
Interest type and location
Exact rights and depths
Headline total and basis
Stated acres and unit
Assumptions / records used
Possible price adjustments
Diligence / extensions
Closing / final payment
Effective date / receivables
Rights retained / obligations
Questions still unanswered

Compare the same asset and conditions before relying on totals. Neither this table nor a per-acre calculation determines value or which offer you should accept.

Optional online companion: mineralrightsxchange.com/mineral-rights-offer-comparison/

Travis: fictional AI guide | Published by Mineral Rights Xchange

WORKSHEET 02

Gather what you already have.

You do not need a perfect file to start asking questions. Mark each item as available, missing, or uncertain. Keep originals and private identifiers secure.

Offer and transaction papers

Offer letter; proposed purchase agreement; proposed deed; all exhibits and revisions; written clarifications; stated deadlines and any existing commitments.

Ownership and location records

Relevant deeds, reservations or assignments; inheritance or estate records if applicable; county and state; legal descriptions; well, lease or unit identifiers you can connect to a document.

Lease and payment records

Leases and amendments you have; division orders; recent royalty statements; notices about suspended or unpaid amounts; useful correspondence with a payor or operator.

A note about what is missing

Write the item, where you looked, and who might have it. The purpose is a useful conversation, not to declare your title complete. Use the existing MRX ownership guide if your first question is which interests you may own.

Share only through the right channel

Do not put account numbers, signatures, banking details or private document images in a public chat or the guide request. Ask the team for the appropriate secure process if document review is needed.

> You can begin with a county, a question and the documents you already have.

Texas record-location example: RRC Royalties FAQ. Ownership-guide link on page 14.

WORKSHEET 03

Make the next conversation useful.

Take this page to a qualified adviser or an MRX conversation. Use general descriptions here; keep private document details in your secure records.

My objective and preferred timing

What I know - and which record supports it

Question 1: the biggest uncertainty

Question 2: the terms I need explained

Question 3: what I need before deciding

Who can answer / my next action

YOUR NEXT STEP

Have an offer or a question? Start there.

You do not need to know every term before starting a conversation. Tell MRX what you are trying to understand, and use your worksheet to keep the discussion focused.

If you have a written offer

Bring the questions you marked as unknown. Ask for help organizing the described asset, assumptions, possible adjustments and closing terms. Keep the full offer and exhibits available for the appropriate review process.

If you are still exploring

Start with the question that matters most: what you own, which records to find, what an offer includes, or what you should ask next. There is no obligation to sell.

Choose how you want help

Use Ask Travis on the website for general educational questions, or request a free directional underwriter review through MRX. When requesting contact, choose the channels you want. Downloading a guide is not a commitment to receive ongoing marketing.

Keep the role clear

Travis is a fictional AI guide. MRX publishes this resource for educational purposes only and does not buy mineral rights. Get independent qualified advice for your own legal, tax, title, valuation and financial decisions.

> Start with your question at MineralRightsXchange.com/offer-review/

REFERENCE DESK

Sources, terms and publication notes.

This guide turns common offer-review topics into questions. It does not reproduce a state's complete law. Check the current source and involve a qualified professional for your situation.

Terms to clarify

Interest: the rights described by the governing documents. Net mineral acres (NMA): an acreage measure whose basis must be confirmed. Net royalty acres (NRA) and royalty decimals: different measures; do not substitute them for NMA. Effective date: the date used in the agreement to allocate stated rights or payments. Diligence: the review described by the parties' documents. These are orientation notes, not legal definitions.

Texas public-record reference

Railroad Commission of Texas, Royalties FAQ: county-record direction, production/permitting data and the agency's limits on lease/royalty advice. Texas-specific; other states have different agencies and procedures.

MRX companion resources

Offer-review framework; private in-browser comparison worksheet; methodology and role; Travis's fictional-guide profile; existing ownership guide; editorial and correction policy. Use the links below.

Publication

Edition 1.1 | October 4, 2026. By Travis, fictional MRX AI Guide. Published by Mineral Rights Xchange; MRX Editorial Team retains publication responsibility. AI-assisted educational material, not a claim of independent professional review. For a correction, use the editorial-policy contact route.

Texas RRC Royalties FAQ

Offer comparison worksheet

Meet Travis

Editorial policy

NARO valuation methods

MRX offer review

Methodology and role

Ownership guide

Educational scenario calculator